New resources to help building industry embrace BIM

The Australian Institute of Architects and Consult Australia will launch their new BIM In Practice resource tools in August at five industry events held around the country.

Building Information Modelling (BIM) is providing the built environment industry with an innovative approach to building design, construction, and management. It is changing and challenging the way industry professionals think about how technology can be applied to the industry.

The BIM In Practice initiative delivers easily understandable, short and targeted advice about BIM related matters for those implementing it in everyday practice within the built environment industry.

Groups of highly respected architecture, engineering and construction industry professionals have expanded on the 'BIM in Australia 2010' report to develop guidance and resources for practitioners who aspire to implement Integrated Project Delivery on their projects through the use of BIM.

The resources, which will be readily available via a dedicated online community forum to be launched on Monday 20 August, cover education, legal & procurement, outreach and management plans.

Industry professionals are encouraged to attend the launch and presentation events to be a part of the growing BIM community in Australia and to learn about how this advanced technology can be integrated in to everyday practice.
